Fund commentary

The Fund closed 2025 with a negative return in December but delivered a positive return for the year as a whole. Duration was reduced to 4.3 years during the month, reflecting sales of 10- and 30-year US Treasuries. US government bond yields ended December higher despite the Federal Reserve delivering a third consecutive rate cut, a decision that included three dissenting votes. Those dissents as well as divergent rate projections illustrated clear divisions within the central bank and led investors to revise expectations not only for rate cuts throughout 2026 but also the impact on policy on the long end of the curve. As a result, the yield curve twist-steepened, with 2-year yields finishing the month 2bps lower, while 10- and 30-year yields rose by 15bps and 18bps respectively. The ECB left interest rates unchanged at its final meeting of the year. Persistently elevated inflation and an economy that is softening but not yet contracting continue to underpin the central bank's cautious stance. Expectations for government bond supply also increased, with Germany set to issue a record volume to finance infrastructure and defence spending, a technical factor that has weighed on yields. Bonds broadly tracked the move in US Treasuries, with yields rising across the curve. Gilt yields were broadly unchanged across the curve in December as uncertainty over the interest-rate outlook persisted. The Bank of England continues to balance easing inflation against a weak economic backdrop, with no clear majority emerging on the rate-setting committee. 2-year Gilt yields ended the month 1bp lower, while 10- and 30-year yields rose by 4bps and 2bps respectively.

Market commentary

2025 ended with the impact of the government shutdown still hampering some data in December. Labour data continued to point to cooling momentum as November nonfarm payrolls rose 64k after an October drop of 105k, driven largely by a sharp decline in federal employment. The unemployment rate rose to 4.6% and wage growth softened. Inflation prints were encouraging but hard to interpret: core CPI eased to 2.6% y/y in a report heavily distorted by missing October price collection and a shortened November sampling window, raising doubts about unusually soft shelter calculations. Survey data echoed a two-speed economy, with ISM manufacturing still contracting (48.2) while services expanded at a nine-month high (52.6) and measures of prices paid cooled. The Federal Reserve delivered a third consecutive 25bp cut, taking the funds range to 3.5%–3.75% in a 9–3 vote, while still projecting only one cut in 2026 and revealing broader resistance in the rate projections. Chair Powell emphasised downside labour-market risks and said a hike is "not anybody's base case," while noting shutdown-related data quality issues make December releases especially important. Minutes indicated most officials still see additional cuts as appropriate if inflation continues to decline, but divisions over timing and how far to go are widening. Trade policy and politics remained tightly linked. The US trade deficit unexpectedly narrowed to its smallest since 2020 as exports surged, helped by non-monetary gold and pharmaceuticals. Domestically, the White House rolled out affordability-themed perks, including a one-off $1,776 "warrior dividend," as debate intensified around Fed leadership choices and institutional independence. In the euro area, inflation edged up to 2.1% y/y in November with core stuck at 2.4% and services slightly firmer, underpinning the ECB's decision to keep the deposit rate at 2% and maintain a meeting-by-meeting approach. Forecasts pointed to firmer growth and inflation returning to 2% only in 2028, with officials signalling the cut cycle is most likely over unless a major downside shock emerges. Activity softened but stayed in expansion in December with Germany again the weak spot. In the UK, activity remained fragile around the late-November budget. GDP fell 0.1% in October and retail sales slipped again in November, while unemployment rose to 5.1% and wage growth eased. Inflation surprised lower—CPI eased to 3.2% in November and services inflation slowed—clearing the way for the Bank of England to cut Bank Rate 25bp to 3.75% on a narrow 5–4 vote, even as Governor Bailey warned future moves would be "closer calls" and the BoE noted the budget could lower inflation by up to half a percentage point next spring.
